Group claims to have more than 800 staffers, 775 venues The economy has forced many corporate dining spaces to close their doors, which has created a more of a need for alternatives like the restaurants below. Staffers are seen at the The Broadberry in Baltimore City on Saturday, August 25, 2009. The Broadberry announced Saturday, that it is losing $20 million over three years to maintain its restaurant. (Kevin Rector/Baltimore Sun) He and his co-founders, Jon Lawler and David Upson, worked as executive chefs at the Downtown Grill and Cecil at the Ritz-Carlton in Washington. After they left their jobs in August 2006, they started The Broadberry, one of the most unique and profitable restaurants to open in the Washington area. The group says it has seven locations, but one of the restaurants has closed in the past year. By my count, there are 874 staffers and 775 venues in the group's restaurant empire.
