A few days ago, the search and discovery company Covalent Research have launched a new tool for web designers, called Web Inspector – a browser plugin. The add-on is available as a free download and can assist web developers in inspecting web pages in detail. Covalent Research: Covalent Research is an international search and discovery company that researches new technologies and innovations for public and private clients. The company's product catalog includes natural language processing and sentiment analysis, as well as a browser extension called Web Inspector that can be used to examine the code of an online page in real-time. Web Inspector is the first tool of its kind for web designers and can be used to make sure all CSS and JavaScript code is working properly on the page. The Covalent Research Web Inspector add-on will be available on the Chrome Web Store, but you can also visit the Covalent Research site and download the add-on from there. If you're interested in using this tool, you can find out more by clicking here. The CSS and JavaScript code is a small part of every web page. A small change to a page will probably not affect its design, but it can sometimes be difficult to figure out the problem and find the right solution. Web Inspector helps web developers by providing detailed information on the code of a webpage, so that the user will be able to see everything that happens. Web Inspector is an easy tool to use. When you have finished with your page, you can save it in the browser, then click on the inspect button to see the code 1d6a3396d6
