Importing RAW Files with ACR In ACR, the first step to take is to import a RAW file. RAW files contain unprocessed, native camera data. When an image is shot in RAW mode, the image data itself is recorded directly to the RAW file. This data is not processed, meaning that there is no aspect of the image, such as contrast, color balance, sharpening, or color correction, that is applied before the data is output to the RAW file. A RAW file contains an enormous amount of raw data, and therefore a RAW file is large. There is no way to import a RAW file in ACR unless it is saved in ACR compatible format (for example, the Adobe RAW format). Adobe has written an automated tool that will read the RAW file into ACR and save it to a JPEG file, with minimal post-processing.

, measured in at least 10 (most often 20 to 50) images per AP) using a cylindrical glass coverslip. The images were acquired at the indicated intervals and the images were then stored on an electronic device. The measurements presented in Fig 3A, 3B{ref-type="fig"} and Fig 4A{ref-type="fig"} were done on an Olympus BX41 microscope at the indicated time points. The analysis of the comet tail migration was done on an Olympus BX40 microscope at the indicated time points. Image analysis {#sec020} -------------- The point spread function (PSF) of the LSCM for wide-field imaging was measured using a calibration slide \[[@pone.0211785.ref054]\] (LSM700, Zeiss). The PSF width for the 40x/0.95NA objective lens used was 0.37 μm. Images of the comet images were visualized in ImageJ (Fiji) and analyzed as described \[[@pone.0211785.ref055]\]. Due to the excessive exposure time required for high γ images (\> 30 bit), we constrained images to be taken at the indicated number of bit. During image analysis, the Tail %, Tail length, Tail moment, and Olive tail moment were generated. For the Olive tail moment, we used the following formula \[[@pone.0211785.ref019]\]: $$Tail\mspace{720mu} moment = Tail\%*\left(Taillength + Length\mspace{720mu} of\mspace{720mu} the\mspace{720mu} comethead\right)$$ The migration was quantified by measuring the fraction of comets in the next section immediately after exposure and again at 30 min and by plotting the fraction at 30 min as a function of the exposure time. Proteomics {#sec021} ---------- For pre-fractionation and phosphopeptide enrichment, samples were diluted 6-fold in 4% SDS and protein concentrations were determined by the Bradford assay. Lysates containing 100 μg of protein were then reduced, alkylated with either iodoacetamide (IAA) or tris (2-carboxyethyl) phosphine
