Structural characteristics of the pyrene-labeled keratin 16 expressed in a cultured human keratinocyte. To understand the origin and potential importance of the keratin 16-induced intracellular domains (ICDs), we investigated the secondary structure of the wild-type keratin 16 (KRT16) and three deletion mutants of the full-length human keratin 16 (KRT16-fl) expressed in a human keratinocyte. In this study, we generated three deletion mutants, KRT16-fl, -Nterm, and -Cterm, by attaching a pyrene group to the amino or carboxyl terminus of KRT16-fl. The structural characteristics of these three proteins were examined by circular dichroism spectroscopy, size exclusion chromatography, and gel electrophoresis. When compared with the structure of full-length keratins with 50-60% alpha-helix, the addition of the peptide extension of the C-terminal domain containing the His-tag or the pyrene group significantly decreased the alpha-helix content of KRT16-fl and the N-terminal domain, respectively. The results of the gel electrophoresis showed that the size of KRT16-fl and -Nterm gradually increased and 570a42141b
