
Fifa 22 Full Version

"The real soccer pitch is a challenging environment," said Craig Duncan, producer of FIFA on PC. "And with HyperMotion Technology, we've used a host of player and ball physics innovations to make the players, ball and stadium move more fluidly in real-time. "If you look closely when a player jumps, the player models tilt slightly in mid-air, as if they are getting ready to shoot. That tilt is part of the player's input to the physics simulation, and it creates a more natural animation with the player's body, which is something we've not done before." By using video data collected from 22 players at UEFA Europa League games in their motion capture suits, FIFA's new motion-capture tech was able to reproduce many of their on-ball, off-ball, and forward-back motions. Speeders and wall-crunchers are now more precise, fluent, and forceful in their movements than ever. Players will pass more accurately than ever, and no ball or player will ever get caught underfoot or pinballed off the back of a crossbar. FIFA 22 has new AI behavior, with individual players taking a more reactive approach to delivering accurate and effective passes. Ground sprint speed is now more realistic, and dynamic. In-Motion Tackles and Pouches are now more intense, with increased energy and intent for players to use them. Tactics and Training: EA Sports' Tactical Analysis will now be contextualised to the current state of the pitch. Players can now read key tactical information from a pre-match analysis, which will influence their decisions throughout the match. Experienced players can now use Tactical Analysis to take better control of matches, including turning down opportunities, calming players during surges, and encouraging particular behaviors, while younger players can learn key attributes and be given more control. The tactical view is now contextualised to the current state of the match. For example, if a player is standing on a counter-attacking opportunity, Tactical Analysis might suggest that this player should step up in defence. In summary, this means that any player who is at the right place at the right time can step up and contribute to the counter-attacking game, while tactical analysis helps players understand the context of their actions, and players are in control of the game rather than being dictated to. The game
