Tear gas and live rounds were fired at two Palestinian children shot dead in the West Bank on Friday JERUSALEM (CNN) -- Israeli forces shot and wounded two Palestinian boys after they crossed into Israel from the West Bank on Friday, according to Israeli security sources.
The boys were taken to Jerusalem's Hadassah

Hospital Medical Center for treatment. The West Bank is under the control of the Palestinian Authority, while Israel has full control of the territory on the eastern side of the Jordan River. The area known as Judea and Samaria is considered disputed territory by most of the world. Two Israeli soldiers were taken to the hospital and also treated for light injuries, one for a broken glass on his face, the other for a skin injury. The incident occurred at the Erez Crossing between Israel and the Gaza Strip, a border crossing through which Palestinian Authority officials travel. One of the children, Abdullah Badr, 12, was a resident of the Issawiya neighborhood in East Jerusalem. His brother, Samer Badr, 10, was a resident of the West Bank village of Umm al-Hiran. Israeli security spokesman Lt. Col. Peter Lerner said the boys were in a field adjacent to the border.

"A pedestrian came from the Palestinian side in the area of the village of Safed and began to cross the border. When he reached the Israeli side, he was approached by (Israeli) Border Police and soldiers, and he was asked to return to the Palestinian side of the fence. When he did not comply with the request, one of the soldiers shot him and wounded him. He was then run over by a vehicle from the Border Police and taken to the hospital." Samer Badr's father, Muhammad, told CNN by phone that the boy was hurt in his foot and leg. "They started to drag him toward the Jordan River," Muhammad Badr said. "We saw Israeli
