The Steelers got down to the Indianapolis four on the final play of the first half and offensive tackle Jerald Foster bit on the Colts' stunt and sacked Peyton Manning for a short loss. But one of Foster's teammates, Justin Hartwig, was the victim of a similar stunt for the touchdown. Hartwig, who signed as a free agent this offseason, was in to block for Hartwig as he was lined up across from Purdue's George Iloka on the Colts' final offensive play of the first half. Iloka initially got the attention of Steelers cornerback William Gay, who slid to help the outside linebacker. Iloka turned his attention to Hartwig, who was the closest man to him. The Colts called a play where they would stunt from the strong side and motion a running back off of the line of scrimmage in an attempt to confuse the offensive line. This was the third time the Colts have done this in the first half of a game this year. The Steelers were able to recognize the play, but Hartwig's assignment was to block linebacker Kavell Conner and then help Foster hold Iloka. Instead of rushing Conner, Indianapolis sent three rushers with the intention of getting Hartwig in a bind. It worked, and Hartwig gave way. Hartwig got hit by lineman John Malecki as he fell backwards. As Hartwig got up, he couldn't continue playing football and was slow to move forward, which is why a penalty was called for unsportsmanlike conduct and he was ejected from the game. But the touchdown didn't count and the Steelers had to punt out of field goal range. The Steelers outscored the Colts, 34-0, in the second quarter this year. But it wasn't a full-on rout. Indianapolis scored twice and the
