A review of the literature and own experience]. Intravenous injection of drugs, for example, calcium salicylate or adrenaline, can result in dermal side effects. The incidence is small, but about 30% of the patients treated with suxamethonium develop linear ecchymosis of the skin surrounding the injection site. These ecchymoses are the result of extravasation of the injected drug into the dermal capillaries. The capillary bed in the dermis is relatively large compared to that in the subcutis, it can be easily damaged by the needle in injection procedures. The major risk factor is the size of the needle. Minute or fine needles cause more frequent extravasation of the drug solution.

The large number of extravasations of the injected drug during local anaesthesia for aseptic operations and of undiluted Xylocaine during minor dermatological surgery require attention. Minimal extravasation can be treated by compression of the injection site. More extensive extravasation requires local treatment with corticosteroids and the elimination of excess liquid. you don't do that then you're going to go to a great big surprise and it's not going to be a nice one. There's no such thing as a truly nice surprise. "So the other thing about surprises...you can be quite prepared for the fact that you're going to get a surprise," he said. "Now the worst surprise is actually, if you're not prepared, the surprise in this situation. "So let's say you come into work on Monday and I've told you at 9am on Monday morning that I'm going to be getting married tomorrow so you're going to have to take a couple of days off. "Now that's going to be a surprise but the worst designed to help you to easily develop the CAD CAM software by using the integrated code and project format. The software is equipped with the latest technologies and include all the features of the Visi 2019 software.

Characteristics and prognosis of lung cancer patients with multiple brain metastases. The purpose of the present study was to characterize the clinical features and prognosis in patients with lung cancer and brain metastases. Between December 2000 and June 2006, all lung cancer patients who had lung cancer and brain metastases treated in our department were retrospectively evaluated. Medical records, imaging studies, and survival were reviewed. There were 98 patients (median age, 64.1 years; 66 men and 32 women). The median time from initial diagnosis of lung cancer to the diagnosis of brain metastases was 2.5 months (range, 0.3-39.8 months). Total brain metastases were diagnosed in 70 patients and multiple brain metastases were diagnosed in 23. The ratio of multiple brain metastases patients was 3.2%. Solitary brain metastases were found in 50 of the total patients, and multiple brain metastases were found in 24. The median survival time after diagnosis of brain metastases was 2.3 months (range, 0-18.0 months). Multivariate analysis revealed that the number of brain metastases, extent of systemic metastases, and performance status were associated with prognosis. The time interval from initial diagnosis of lung cancer to diagnosis of brain metastases could be limited. The number of brain metastases was an independent prognostic factor.
