The Moscow Dramaturgy and Media Studies department launched Rodina.doc, a point-and-click adventure game with documentary fragments and scenarios. Using this virtual toolset, we try to put the events and crimes of modern Russian history into an expressive and dynamic narrative. In each episode, we try to solve a drama of our time. Our game is the result of many real cases, such as the trials of the "New Times" journalists, the 1998 murder of academician Igor Smirnov, the Moscow theater siege in 2003, the Sheremetyevsky tower bombing, and many others. We want you, the player, to get involved. Travel around Russia as your life intersects with historical catastrophes. Investigate, judge, and play out our story, piece by piece, point by point. Every discovery changes our view on reality, on our daily lives. We hope that the reader will get involved in our work, whether as a spectator or as an active participant. We believe that the game will reveal and demonstrate the inescapable connection between what happened in 1991-2008 and what is happening in Russia today. What We Can Promise: – The game is a unique documentary project, the first of its kind in Russia. – We will not present our project as a "game but as a new form of media art". – Rodina.doc is not a game, but a form of documentary art. – We will not tell a story of the 1990s, but of our time. – The documentarian is a modern cultural professional, with a focus on blogging, art, and investigative reporting. – In the course of the game, it is possible to choose between two distinct routes of study: a technical "biography" and a "collected materials". – The game has less than 30 scenarios. – The game is a step towards producing cultural works and their theatrical premiere in 2021. What We Can Expect from You: – We are willing to learn from you. – You can report on the state of Russian human rights, or read our news articles and blogposts about criminal cases. – You can compare your impressions to ours and offer your own. – We can answer your questions about our project. – You can tell us about your own political interests and life stories. – You can join is a maze of corridors in an abandoned lighthouse on the northernmost tip of the Wandering Island. The lighthouse is an inaccurate representation of a traditional Chinese mystic symbol and a lion amongst Chinese gods. Set in the ruins of the lighthouse, the labyrinth is a maze of small corridors and rooms, interconnecting like magical paths in a Chinese puzzle. In legend, a hero is said to have single-handedly defeated the three Daoist Immortal Triad gods that were terrorising the local villagers. Many believe the story to be a legend, but whether it is true or not, the mortal remains inside the abandoned lighthouse are certainly a testament to a true story of perseverance and challenge. lighthouse are certainly a testament to a true story of perseverance and challenge. A tree fell across the entrance to the Tower Of TigersQiuQiu Birds Cave, blocking off the entrance. Fortunately, the lizards in the nearby caves were able to assemble a beam of light with the aid of some carefully placed torches and quickly cleared the foliage from the entrance. In addition to the dried up man resting on the pedestal, the lizards also found a tablet resting in the mud on the floor of the main hall. The tablet is of red jade, engraved with the mystic text: "Death is but a change of clothing. Live with honor of goodness. Then life is possible." The tablet appears to have been there for some time, if the dried up man is any indication. The tablet is most likely the "talisman" the hero is said to have found and used to defeat the three evil Immortal Triads.

What's new in The Tower Of TigerQiuQiu Birds Cave:
