Solution Manual Of Physical Chemistry Ira Levine Pdf DownloadQ: From two different randomly selected rows, return the set of attributes that occur in one row and not in the other The context is identifying relevant events in a time series of binary data. Specifically, given two rows with different lengths, selected randomly from a much larger set of rows, how to return the subset of attributes in the first row that are not in the second row. Both rows are sorted by column 1. The rows are not identical but we know that they are very close matches (difference between rows is less than 0.01) and thus an arbitrary one-to-one matching algorithm is acceptable. df1
