It is the legendary free software for music production and sound design.Datadisc Datadisc is a company that makes applications for mobile devices and handheld computers. Datadisc was started by a group of ex-Protek enthusiasts that wanted to keep up with the rapid evolution of handheld technology. The company's first product was a programmable e-book which was a great success. Based on this success Datadisc has released several other products: an electronic game (The Pinball Magazine) and a driving game (Roadie Racer), a trading card game (Magic The Gathering), and an application for use in conjunction with Bluetooth headsets (Bluetooth Connect). In early 2009, Datadisc released a Twitter application for the iPhone. Datadisc had an open beta for their Crossword application. In February 2011, Datadisc released a product for the iPad, named Crossword for iPad, which uses the iBooks application framework that the iPad uses. Crossword is the first product that uses iBooks application framework and the iPad's multitasking capabilities. Datadisc still sells the original e-book, (also known as the "Databook") and several other applications. In October 2012, Datadisc released a new software version, Crossword for iPhone and Datadisc for iPad. Both apps are available for the iPhone and the iPad. Datadisc will be releasing a new version of Crossword for Windows 8 in the Fall of 2012. Datadisc released an official application for the LG Nexus 5x in June 2016.
