The meter gauge that shows the current amount of Final Smash meters begins with 0 on the right end of the meter, and increases with damage to the Final Smash from the left side, with maximum damage filling the gauge. As the meter is filled, a player has less and less time to make a move, even if the Final Smash is already activated, and the gauge also fills up with time sooner. The glowing aura of the character's standby mode appears as a circular red, yellow, or green glow on the screen, depending on which Final Smash was chosen. The aura stays on the player for 8 seconds, as indicated by a second clock counting down. If no movement is performed during this time, the aura will fade and the gauge will fill up. If the player hits an opponent with damage, for instance from the Final Smash or while walking through the aura, the character will wink and red light will start to emanate from his or her eyes. It is uncertain whether this is an indication that the character is about to use a special move. In fact, the only Smash Ball for which this is known to happen is the Cell Shaped Smash Ball. Any Smash Ball, however, will cause the character to gain visual damage even when this does not cause any other special effects. The triangle that appears at the end of a Final Smash and the last frame of the timer is the clue frame. Activating any Final Smash during the timer will completely fill the gauge and lose the character time. Instead, the player will activate their special move. Leaving the scene is canceled if the final frame of the final special move and the triangle is shown, or the final frame of the activated special move is completed. Leaving early is canceled if the triangle is shown. Leaving early, however, does not mean that the Final Smash is canceled. The player can then use the Final Smash to attack their opponent.

KMS Activator Ultimate 2019 4.6 Final

On the other end of the spectrum, some Final Smashes actually push the limits of the game mechanics. Some Final Smashes are also a result of the developer running out of ideas on how to design attacks or character abilities, and designers simply just make them as outlandish as possible. On paper, most of these Final Smashes may seem impossible to use, or not effective. But then, they're used anyway. Examples include Donkey Kong's Hammer Time Final Smash, in which Donkey Kong pushes his hammer through the ground, potentially acting like a ground pound attack in 3D and pummeling the opponent. Another example is the Final Smash of Wii Fit Trainer, which causes the player's avatar to aggressively dance around and unleash dance moves upon the opponent. [3] In Smash 4, a glitch can occur affecting the eyeballs of multiple characters, most notably Jigglypuff, as a result of an oversight in the coding of the graphical effects of characters eyeballs during Final Smashes. When breaking the Smash Ball with a move that causes a character's eyeballs to point in a certain direction, upon finishing their Final Smash, said fighter's eyeballs will be locked in this same position until a move or action is performed that also causes the fighter to look in a direction. This occurs because a fighter's eyeballs are temporarily replaced with yellow eyeballs when they break a Smash Ball, at which point their regular eyeballs are stored exactly as they were just before their eyeball model was replaced.
