NFPA documents reflect the consensus developed by the fire service and represent the ideas of the entire membership. With each new edition of the code or standard, NFPA aims to improve upon the previous edition, reflecting the progressive standards of the profession. This is a true reflection of the fire service. NFPA codes and standards should be a valuable resource and should be widely used and learned by all fire service professionals and agencies. Each new edition of NFPA's codes and standards incorporates relevant standards set forth by international organizations and adopted through national legislation. NFPA's codes and standards are critical tools for fire service organizations and are integral to a fire service profession that is continually improving the safety of the public. Laws and regulations are changing as society changes. Regulations, guidelines, and codes that are adapted to new technologies and addressing new concerns are necessary to properly serve the public. NFPA's publication program is designed to respond to these changing standards and laws, and to the changing fire service profession. NFPA codes and standards are available in both traditional print format and as ebooks, and both formats are made available for free and in a wide range of formats. Ebooks allow you to read the codes and standards, and to easily transfer the codes and standards to an ereader, smartphone, tablet, or other device. If you have any questions about the format of NFPA's codes and standards, please contact the Editorial Office at info@nfpa.org . 5ec8ef588b
