However, while in most cases there will be practically no changes, Adobe decided to make several significant changes in this release. Most importantly, I decided to compare Lightroom 5 and CC Photoshop 15.1. For all of these tests, I used an HP Pavilion 17-f497sp laptop with a 1.9 GHz Intel Core 2 Duo CPU, 4GB of RAM, an ATI Mobility Radeon HD 6450 graphics card with 256MB of VRAM and a 500GB 7200 RPM Hard Drive with Windows 7 Ultimate 64-Bit installed. Adobe Photoshop and Lightroom are not presented in the UEFI boot menu on new computers. That said, installing and running Lightroom 5 will actually install and run under 64-bit Windows regardless of the processor. So if you are experiencing any issues during the install process, a 64-bit version of Windows is your solution. If you are installing and running on a 32-bit version of Windows, however, there is a known issue with the Lightroom 5 installer that prevents legitimate installation of Lightroom 5 on 32-bit computers. The only workaround I have found for this issue is to dual-boot Windows on your computer. However, if you are using a 64-bit version of Windows, the easiest thing to do is download and install Lightroom 5 on your laptop. Though it might not seem like much, Lightroom 5 will make an incredible difference in the speed with which you work. To be clear – a lot of Photoshop app developers have added this function. The first example that came to my mind was MacDevils. That app, however, requires that you be signed in with a Mac Dev account and continue the log in using a Mac. If you go that route, you are then in a whole world of trouble. That is only one of several Mac Dev apps, though, that I feel provide little value other than a vehicle to post files in a web-based collaborative environment. That is a separate and important discussion for today. Adobe Photoshop Sketch is more akin to a full-blown web app for editing a PSD, more than just a place to post it and give feedback.

Phishing scams and hacked accounts are an inconvenience for every consumer. The sheer number of emails threatening to delete or share sensitive information or to suspend your account can be enough to scare someone into complying with the fraudsters involved. On top of that, the email account holder isn't always aware of the breach, since the emails are sent from reputable organizations such as Facebook and Twitter. All of that makes a password reset an unpleasant ordeal for everyone. By analyzing a user's messages, the feature would check if they posted an unchangeable password that they used over the past year. Given that users could have more than one account registered with us, a list of accounts that had such an unchangeable password would be created. Based on that list, the feature would suggest possible passwords for that user to reset. e3d0a04c9c
