This would seem to point to the loss of the core advantages of cheap air freight and a dense supply chain network, since a heavily monitored supply chain is a risky one. It’s also unclear whether the hacker could source a load of similar items directly from the Chinese manufacturing centers. A company like Walmart, however, has committed to supply chain security. As part of that commitment, it has installed a sort of Tor-like tool on its website, the “Walmart Anti-Counterfeit.” It allows anyone to check the authenticity of a product, but the program automatically generates a coupon and directs online shoppers to the Web site of the best licensed product in the case of counterfeits, a store where they can make a gift certificate purchase. It’s the sort of program that could
